They had a meaningful conversation about traditions and customs, they are renewed with the renewal of time, but they should not lose their origin.

25-30 years ago our people had fun, weddings and celebrations in their own homes. In each makhalla, in the villages, there was enough food for the needs of the people - dishes and utensils were kept in the house of the trusted neighbors and given to the weddings when it is needed. Each event in the neighborhood was conducted with the elder's permission and timing, with no cost or waste. The situation was so aggravated that they were blamed for having a wedding and being in debt. Also, many people say, "It's hard to live," "When will we get rid of this ritual?" Indeed, we must strive to abandon the so-called Western culture.
